

Winter on Cold Stream Pond brought with it a number of unusual wildlife sightings. Red foxes capering on the lake and camp roads; whitetail deer in great abundance; and even a coyote sauntering off the lake, perhaps tired from a great day of ice fishing. And, Steve Greenleaf reported that late one afternoon while ice fishing, he heard Al Theriault's beagle raising an uproar. He looked up the lake just in time to see a moose strolling across the ice from the west shore of the lake to the bluff. Unfortunately, no time for photos of that one—better luck next time, Steve.

A pair of bobcats has been taking advantage of the great dining around the lake. Not only were they sampling fresh fish at the Enfield Hatchery and posing there for the wonderful photos above and at left, but they also appeared quite regularly for a meal of fish remains on the ice in front of Lorraine Ewer's home. Lorraine told us that she had been putting fish skins and cleanings on the lake for eagle feed, when one day instead of an eagle, the bobcat seen in the photo below decided to take advantage of this fishy windfall. He returned quite often—Lorraine was able to get some great photos.

Bobcat photos courtesy of Buster Carter, Wildlife Biologist, and Lorraine Ewer